NOTE BY THE COUNCIL OF THE IRISH TEXTS SOCIETY.

In offering their congratulations to the Rev. P. S. Dinneen, M.A., D.Litt., the Editor of the revised Irish Dictionary, and to Mr. L. S. Gogan, M.A., and his other assistants on the completion of their long and arduous task, and in thanking them for the courage and ardour which they have brought to bear upon it, the Council of the Irish Texts Society desire at the same time to acknowledge the goodwill shown towards the undertaking by the Government of Saorstát Eireann in voting, in the year 1924, the sum of one thousand pounds towards the cost of the work. Without this help, it would have been impossible to have offered the work to the public at the small price of 12*s.* 6*d.* The Council also wish to acknowledge the kind help of all those friends who have subscribed to the loan and donation funds. A list of names will be published in the next report of the Society.

Signed on behalf of the Council.

November, 1927.

In the larger modern dictionaries of living tongues the illustrative and elucidatory passages quoted are usually chosen for other reasons than for that instinctive life which makes the spoken word the true seed of literature. In this dictionary the aim has been to select for quotation illustrative phrases and passages endowed with something of this deep and vital character of speech, the imaginative glow, the associative colour, that alone can reveal to the student the genius of the language.

The folk-lore, the habits and beliefs, the songs and tales, the arts and crafts of the people as well as the history, topography and antiquities of the country have been pressed into service to throw light on the meanings of words or to supply words or expressions not previously recorded.

As within the last few years, even while this book was in preparation, the Irish language has come to be widely studied and has taken a certain hold of the educational systems and commercial institutions of Ireland, such effort as was possible has been made to bring the dictionary into line with the requirements of the country in these directions. The wide and varied assortment of Irish words and phrases here presented will afford ample material for an extensive use of the language and for its application to social, commercial, scientific and literary pursuits. The principle of selection aimed at in the illustrative phrases, already referred to, tends to make these phrases instinct with life and suitable, with the development that cultivation brings, for the vivid and accurate expression of modern ideas. The snatches of poem and song occasionally quoted, though often a couple of centuries old, have lost little of their verve or freshness.

Local words of approved genuineness have been freely inserted. Loan words have been inserted when they have a footing in the language; such words frequently acquire a new shade of meaning. It is not desirable, however, to encourage the use of words only recently borrowed and for which there are good Irish equivalents, even if these latter have gone largely out of use. The borrowing of words is a recognised process in the growth and development of a language and can become a source of strength rather than of weakness if kept in judicious check, and especially if the borrowed element be assimilated by the aid of the syntax and inflexional system of the borrowing language.

As regards the connotations or meanings of the words, it may be said that few words in any language have a single simple signification. Most words, in addition to the basic meaning, have many shades and developments of meaning; in extreme examples a word may finally come to have a meaning which is the exact opposite of its original signification. The aim has been to give the basic meaning precedence and to set down the shades or changes of meaning in due sequence, as far as possible. In the early portions of the book these are grouped with the corresponding illustrative examples; in the later parts the meanings are all grouped at the beginning. In neither case, however, are these rules absolutely adhered to.

Owing to the lack of intensive cultivation, due to historical conditions, Irish orthography is somewhat more irregular than that of several European languages. In recent times attempts to report dialectic pronunciations more distinctly have, to some extent, intensified orthographical variations. In general a stable form is available and is here aimed at; the chief variants being given at the end of the connotation and often in cross-reference. The first edition of this work admittedly stabilised and, to a considerable extent, standardised orthographical usage, and this object has been kept steadily in view in preparing the present edition. The spoken and written languages though naturally closely allied are distinct; one is for the ear, and its form is subject to many variations; the other is for the eye, and necessarily demands a high standard of regularity. A letter silent in speech has often a useful part to play in preserving the historical sense-relations between words. A recent and plausible modification, for example, is the termination -ú for -uġaḋ; this, however, destroys the apparent link with the other verb endings (-uiġim, ꝛc.) and the participle ending (-uiġte, ꝛc.).

The orthography adopted, then, is generally that of the traditional usage, with certain accepted modifications; and is practically identical with that employed in the first edition. This has been widely accepted, and, perhaps, nowhere with more wholeheartedness than in the province of Ulster. It is believed that the interests of simplicity as well as of uniformity, a uniformity that affords a working basis even for dialectic variations, are best served by retaining the traditional orthography even in the verbal endings -uġaḋ, -aḋ, ꝛc.

It may be mentioned here that the long plural ending -(a)ibe of the first edition has been replaced by -(a)í except where it is actually the regular form; even then the short form may be often used; e.g.

bacá, -í, but áladh, -adha (-aighe) or -aí as also álcha. A final convention in regard to the spelling of participles, n- groups, slender r- groups and final double consonants is, however, somewhat difficult to arrive at. Words like bárr, feárr, crc. have been accented throughout, although the double consonant seems a sufficient indication of the nature of the vowel sound. Triphthongs and the diphthong eo are not accented; eó (glide and ó) in the latter case being the usual pronunciation, the only exceptions being deoch, leoghaim, reo and one or two other words.

Irish, especially Irish poetry, is rich in compound words. The compounds are in fact composed ad libitum, even in everyday speech. In the early parts of the book compounds are usually given as separate words. From, say, O onwards they are as a rule grouped, especially where they occur in large numbers. The method of registry in this case also varies. Usually they are alphabetically arranged; sometimes they are classified (see neamh-). It has been, however, difficult to recognise a principle in regard to the palatalisation of the first element of the compound. Palatalised and non-palatalised forms are common in good texts and in local usage; and writers may often find it convenient to give both elements without change, as mí-náire for mío-náire, leaba-réal for leabh-réal, crc.

In Irish, as in other inflectional languages, there is a tendency to generalise oblique forms, e.g. cig or coigh for ceach, reilb for realb; in large tracts of Connemara it is now usual to say coir, muic, láimh, crc. for cor, muc, lámh, crc. In the dictionary, however, the normal form is the one usually given.

In the presence of conflicting literations the selected form has been based on etymological data where available (thus: bir from English vice rather than bidhir, and ghúr or ghuir rather than ghumhair, the first mentioned occurring in the "Táin"), and otherwise on simplicity of form or on general usage. On the other hand, no reasonable objection can be raised against the passing into general use of such forms as ghnár, clár, crc. Such reductions are well within the limits of simplification and development inherent in the language itself. Such exceptions are, in the main, rare. Isolated cases, e.g. crannaighe for corrannaighe are common but do not merit permanent recognition.

In the large assortment of material here presented there are, naturally, uncertain elements on which the last word has by no means been said. For several reasons, among which is the disappearance of the neuter gender from the modern language, the gender of certain Irish substantives varies between masculine and feminine both in spoken and written usage. In these pages the solution of such problems, which the available evidence seemed to warrant, has been given. The etymological conjectures, which have been sparingly inserted, will, it is hoped, have the effect of stimulating inquiry into doubtful matters.

It should be observed that words or phrases to which a district has been assigned are not necessarily confined to that district, and that words, etc., assigned to a province or wide area are not necessarily co-extensive in use with these areas.

It is believed that the connotations generally, and especially those of the more important and fundamental words, are as full and as fully illustrated by examples as it is desirable to make them in a work like this.

Besides the numerous tales, tracts, poems, etc., that have been explored in the preparation of this work, it has been computed that more than 300 vocabularies, earlier and modern, printed and in manuscript, have been searched for the greater part of the book.

An effort has been made to secure as much representative provincial Irish in word and phrase as possible. Dr. Myles Dillon, Mr. O'Donnell of Newport, and many others, have supplied useful gleanings of Connaught (North and South) and Aran words and phrases. I have myself been constantly conversing with Irish-speaking emigrants from Connaught of whom a steady stream is constantly visiting Dublin. Moreover Mr. Gogan, by conviction, is partial to certain Connaught word-forms. Several distinguished Ulstermen, natives of North- and Mid-Ulster, have by their contributions helped to insure an adequate representation for the Northern dialect. Nor have the dialects of Meath, Omeath, or the Glens of Antrim been neglected. The Irish of the Comeragh district of Waterford has been well explored by Fr. McGrath and Mr. Weldon; and Dr. Sheehan's "Seán-Caint na nDéise" has done much for the Decies generally. A host of able collectors have all but exhausted West- and North-West Kerry Irish (mainland and insular) and in this connection Fr. Clune's "Réiltíní Óir" deserves mention. The Ballyvourney "Four Masters," whose names are given elsewhere, together with Canon O'Leary and others, well represent the Irish of Muskerry or Mid-Cork. South and South-West Cork and Kerry are also well to the front. The Irish of Clare and West Limerick has several exponents. Even from those counties and districts in which the tide of Irish has ebbed words and phrases have been obtained. It will thus appear that no corner of Ireland has been left unexplored, though it is not pretended that nothing has been left for other workers to glean; rather should it be understood that the dictionary will be a convenient starting point for future gleaners in the fields of words, phrases and folk-lore in Irish. Care has been taken, however, not to accentuate the undoubted dialectic differences that exist and for which stress and intonation largely account. Omissions and errors which readers may notice will be gratefully received by the Editor.

The advice and extensive learning of Mr. L. S. Gogan, M.A., N.U.I., Assistant Keeper, Irish Antiquities, National Museum, were available during the greater part of the preparation of the work; but more especially during the last four or five years has he laboured with unflagging energy and zeal in the work of revision, transcription, arrangement and research to an extent impossible to my single effort. He came to my aid when the pressure of the work was at its height and when the mass of material by its very extent threatened to prove unmanageable by a single worker, and his ardour has proved inextinguishable; and not I alone, but the wide circle for whom this book is intended, owe him a debt of gratitude for his sustained patriotic effort.

The Rev. Denis O'Flynn, B.A., N.U.I., of the Archdiocese of Dublin, rendered valuable aid in proof-reading and in other directions, devoting to the work with patriotic zeal for three or four years whatever time and energy he could spare from his ecclesiastical studies. Miss Eileen Harnett, M.A., N.U.I., of the French Faculty of the National University, gave much assistance in the work of compilation in its earlier stages. Some assistance was also given with good will by Very Rev. P. Woulfe, P.P., and Mr. Séamas O Casaide, M.A. Special thanks are hereby tendered to Mrs. Máire Gogan, Miss Cecilia Geoghegan, Miss Louise O'Flynn, Miss Kathleen Goodfellow, for assistance, generously given, in various directions.

I am also under obligation to the kind and courteous staffs of the National Library of Ireland, and the National Museum.

During the progress of the work many useful suggestions from the Council of the Irish Texts Society, on whom, as on myself, the work has been a heavy burthen, reached me through their Honorary Secretary, Mr. T. D. FitzGerald, for which I am deeply grateful.

Finally, I gladly bear testimony to the ability and insight with which the excellent staff of Messrs. Sealy, Bryers and Walker, the printers, handled the work throughout.

I am grateful to the following for special interest taken in the book :—Rev. Lawrence Murray (Archdiocese of Armagh) ; Cú Uladh (Mr. Peter McGinley) ; Mr. Henry Morris ; Aoidhín Mac Gréagóir ; Mr. Delargey ; Mr. J. J. Buckley (Acting Director, National Museum, Dublin) ; Dr. Myles Dillon ; Mr. MacDonald (South Africa) ; Micheál Ó Briain ; Conchubar Ó Dearmúna ; Micheál Ó Loingsigh ; Tadhg Ó Rioghbardáin ; Seán Mac Murchadha Caomhánach. Prof. T. O Máille, University College, Galway, kindly lent me proofs of his interesting work " Urlabhraidheacht." Fr. Denis O'Flynn, besides furnishing me with word-lists, kindly drew my attention to Fr. O'Growney's annotated " O'Reilly's Dictionary " in Maynooth College.

As regards deceased contributors I wish to make special and grateful mention of Dr. E. C. Quiggin, Fr. McGrath, Mr. Robert Weldon, Mr. P. Ferriter, and Mr. J. C. Ward.

Lists of words, phrases, etc., of varying scope and extent were obtained from :—His Ex. T. M. Healy ; Right Rev. Abbot of Mount Melleray ; Very Rev. Canon Breen, Killarney ; Very Rev. Canon MacDermott, P.P. (Diocese of Elphin) ; Rev. Fr. Courtney (Kerry) ; Mr. James Fenton ; Mr. Michael Breen, Castleknock (North-East Kerry words) ; Mr. Justice Forde (chiefly ornithological words) ; Dr. Douglas Hyde ; Prof. T. F. O'Rahilly ; Dr. John P. Mac Enri ; Mr. Charles MacNeill ; Peadar Ó Duibhdá (chiefly Omeath and Mid-Ulster words) ; Séamar Ó Súilleabháin (South Kerry) ; Mr. Thomas Forde, Dublin (words from the Tuam—Claregalway district) ; Rev. Fr. Cussen, O.P., M.A. ; Mr. P. Mac Sweeney (Waterford words) ; Tomár Ó Conceanainn ; Mr. P. O'Donnell, Newport, Co. Mayo ; Eoghan Ó Neachtain ; Mr. John Hogan, Inchicore (embodying extracts from MS. remains of the late Mr. John Glynn of Tuam) ; Miss Geraldine Griffin (words kindly selected by her from current journals and magazines) ; Mr. Honan, Bray (Clare words) ; Mr. M. McEnry (Mayo words) ; Pádraic Ó Dómhnaill (late editor " Fáinne an Lae ") ; Dómhnall Ó Gruanna ; Mr. J. J. Doyle ; Mr. Denis Dinneen ; Mr. J. J. Farrelly.

From the above list no name not given in the list of References has been advertently omitted.

Use has also been made of some of the lists obtained in the prize competition instituted by the Council of the Irish Texts Society some years ago. The Gaelic League Oireachtas tales, etc., were not available for use except to a limited extent.

This will in all likelihood be my last work for the Irish Texts Society. In this respect I may consider myself as "donatum jam rude." I sometimes think of that Society as a distinctive university unchartered and unendowed, in which, though unworthy, I have been filling a "Chair" since the year 1900 when they published my editio princeps of O'Rahilly, in which I had kind assistance from Prof. Bergin. That work was followed by the first edition of this dictionary (1904); by Vols. II. and III. (the late Mr. Comyn having edited Vol. I.) of Keating's History (1908); by a Smaller Irish-English Dictionary (1910); by a revised edition of O'Rahilly, edited in conjunction with Prof. O'Donoghue (1911); and by Vol. IV. of Keating's History (1914), and the present work (1927). On these volumes, eight in all, I reckon that, led by the lure and prompted by the pathos of unfinished or undeveloped undertakings, I have expended twenty years of severe labour, ten continuous years of which have been devoted to the present volume, and fourteen in all to lexicographical work. The holder of a "Chair" is expected not only to produce work useful to the public but also to stimulate alumni to follow up or surpass his efforts:

Ignem cujus scintillam ipse dedisti
Flagrantem late et rapientem cuncta videbis.

In this I have been favoured. The volumes in question have certainly been widely used. And to name only Prof. O'Donoghue, Mr. J. H. Lloyd, and Mr. J. J. O'Kelly among my earlier helpers, I can now point to Mr. Gogan and Fr. O'Flynn whose ability and enthusiasm in the cause of Irish learning are capable of scaling heights entirely beyond my reach.

It is pleasant to observe that my old friends, Miss Eleanor Hull, as Secretary to the Council, and Dr. Hyde, as President of the Irish Texts Society, are still at their posts, as in 1900, when my "O'Rahilly" appeared.

AIDS TO PRONUNCIATION.*

In the tables which follow an effort has been made to represent the sounds of Irish letters and combinations of letters in terms of English sounds, as English is spoken generally in Ireland. Of course perfect equivalence is not always attained. Thus broad l as in lá is more guttural than l in law and closely resembles ll as in hollow.

Slender n as in cuin is not found in English except, perhaps, in a word like Bert(ie) (in Irish-English).

To speak generally, the difference between broad and slender consonants is a strong characteristic of Irish speech.

The diphthongs and triphthongs in Irish are, in several instances, not paralleled in English.

In parts of Connaught, especially the neighbourhood of Achill and North Mayo, the sound of d slender approaches that of dg as in judge; thus cuid is pronounced something like cuidge.

Similarly t slender, cf. teagarc pronounced chaggasc.

The d sound in deil, in Galway and South Mayo, is like d in due, dew, as generally pronounced in Ireland, and differs from the sound of d in din which represents the Munster d slender and from the N. Mayo sound of d slender which is like dg in judge.

Similarly ae, ao, have variations of sound in Munster, Connaught and Ulster.

Sounds of the Letters.

á	as in	bán,	like aw in awl;
a	as in	mac,	like o in mock;
b	as in	bád,	like b in board;
c	broad as in	cor,	like c in cool;
c	slender as in	cinead,	like k in kin;
d	broad as in	dóigh,	like th in though and smt. like d in dough;
d	slender as in	deil,	like d in din;
é	as in	gé,	like a in fate;
e	as in	le	like e in get;
f	as in	fóin,	like f in form;
g	broad as in	gorm	like g in go;
g	slender as in	gile,	like g in begin;
h	as in	hata	like h in hop;
í	as in	fín	like ee in seen;
i	as in	fin	like i in din;

* For a more detailed and technical account of Irish sounds, general and dialectic, than can be given here, the following works may be consulted :—

(1) "The Sounds of Munster Irish," by Rev. Richard Henebry.
(2) "The Sounds of Irish," by Seán Ó Cuiv.
(3) "fograideadt Gaedilge an Tuaiscirt," by Séamus Ó Searcaig.
(4) "fograideadt na Gaedilge," by Criostóir Ó Raghallaigh.
(5) "A Dialect of Donegal," by E. C. Quiggin.
(6) "The Dialect of Torr, Co. Donegal," and "Munster Vowels and Consonants" by Alf. Sommerfelt.
(7) "Urlabhraidheacht," by Tomás O Máille.

Two liquids or a liquid and a mute generally do not coalesce as ᴅeᴀlꞒ pronounced ᴅeᴀnᴀꞴ ; ꞅeᴀlḃ pronounced ꞅeᴀlᴀḃ.

Final e following an unaspirated consonant is always pronounced.

Such words as cꞎoiᴅe are monosyllables, but the archaic pronunciation as two syllables is maintained in syllabic verse.

Stress and intonation account for a good deal of the differences between the three main dialects of Irish. Thus ᴀṁán is stressed on the final syllable in M. ; in Con. the stress is on the first syllable but the second remains long ; in U. the stress is on the first syllable and the second is gnly. short.

Words like mᴀꞎcᴀċ, bᴀcᴀċ have the stress on the final syllable in M , but in the gs. mᴀꞎcᴀiꞴ, bᴀcᴀiꞴ the stress is shifted to the first syllable.

The obscurity of sound of short vowels is to be noted, thus ꞅcéᴀlᴛᴀ so far as sound goes might be written ꞅcéᴀlᴛu, ꞅcéᴀlᴛo ; similarly ᴛuꞎuꞅ, ᴛuꞎᴀꞅ, ᴛuꞎoꞅ.

ıo and eᴀ are pron. identically in unstressed syllables of words of more than one syllable.

The lists given below will help the student by fixing more or less accurately the values of Irish letters and combinations of letters.

(1) The following Irish words have English words of the same sound but of different meaning placed opposite to them. In some cases the equivalence of sound is absolute, as bím = beam ; in other cases there is a slight discrepancy arising chiefly from the quality of the consonants but sometimes from the quality of the vowels :—

mᴀc	mock	meᴀꞅ	mass
ᴀꞅ	ass, as(p)	leᴀꞅ	lass
bᴀꞅ	boss	ꞅeᴀl	shall
lᴀꞅ	loss	ꞅın	shin
cᴀll	cowl (M.)	cıꞅ	kish
ṫᴀll	howl (M.)	mí	me
ᴀ́l	awl	ní'l	kneel
ꞅᴀ́n	fawn	ꞅín	sheen
ꞅᴀ́ꞅ	sauce	mín	mean
ꞅᴀ́ṫ	raw	bím	beam
ȝé	gay	bí	be

After nouns the genitive singular and nominative plural are given ; other cases as required ; after verbs (which are given in the 1st person singular, indicative mood), the verbal is given ; after adjectives, the genitive singular feminine, which is in general the same as the comparative and superlative ; many adjectives from the nature of the case, are not used in the comparative or superlative, but are nevertheless declined in the positive degree ; after compound nouns, the genitive and plural endings are not given when they are identical with those of the terminal simple nouns, and compound adjectives are not in general declined.

The general rule followed in setting down the inflectional termination after words is to repeat the last letter of the invariable portion of the word, thus bronntóir, -óra, -óirí, signifies that the genitive case of bronntóir is bronntóra and its nominative plural is bronntóirí ; where, however, the inflexional termination is purely an addition to the noun, the last letter is generally not repeated, thus fuaċ, -a, signifies that fuaċa is the genitive case of fuaċ. The slight deviations from this method which occasionally occur will be readily understood.

Foclóir Gaeḋilge agus Béarla.

A (Ailm, elm, etc.), the first letter of the Modern Irish Alphabet; smt. interchanges with o, ea, io, u, e.g., amar, iomar omar, umar; arair, earair; ai, ui, ei al. interchange, as do ái, ae, ao, aoi, ói, aḋ; smt. initial a is dropped, as a(túṁnae) or has f prefixed, as (f)áraim; smt. both forms subsist, as anaim, fanaim; smt. it is pref. to coiṫce, riaṁ, &c., through analogy; is smt. separated incorrectly from verb of which it is a part, as aoeir (a oeir).

A, particle used before numerals when they do not qualify nouns, as a haon, one, the number one; a cúig, five; bliaḋain a céad, the year one hundred; uiṁir a ré, number six; tṡaen a reacṫ, the seven o'clock train.

A, interj., aspir., precedes voc. case, sing. and pl., often slurred over in pronunciation; silent before vowel or ḟ and somet. not written, being replaced by an apostrophe or simply omitted; smt. Eng. O, though not an equivalent, represents it; a ḟir an ḟáinne, O man of the ring; a Ṗáḋraig, O Patrick; éirṫiḋ, a ḋaoine, listen, O people; a ṁic, my son; the usage, a ṁ' anam, my soul! is exceptional.

A, poss. a. (1) her, its (f.) prefixes h- to vowels; (2) his, its (m), aspirates; (3) their, eclipses, prefixes n- to vowels; a ceann, his head; a ceann, her head; a gcinn, their heads; a h-obair, her work; a obair, his work; a n-obair, their work; it introduces the demonstrative, a leiṫéir fir oe ḋuine, such a person; oft. used proleptically, e.g., agus a ḟior aige go nabar ann, he knowing that I was there; ní maiṫ liom a ráḋ go bruil, &c., I do not like to say that, etc.; ir oeacair a ṁear gur, it is hard to think that, etc.; tá a lán (liaṫ) ḋaoine ann, there is a (its) large number of people there; with abstracts, agus a lionṁaire ir mar ḃíoḋar, seeing these were so numerous; ní beag liom a ġainne, I think it is scarce enough; used with tuiúr, ceaṫrar, &c.; iad a ḋt., all three of them; cuaḋadar a ḋt. ann, the three went there (now largely writte 1 in this sense and regarded as a prep.); in phr. like oeaṁan (=doṁ oeaṁan) a ċaoile, nothing slenderer, no slenderer.

A, pseudo-relative particle, followed by aspiration which alone may represent the relativity; an fear (a) ċuiṁeann, an fear (a) ċuiṁear, he who puts; better written do, an fear do ċuiṁeann; cf. do ċuir sé, he put, and sé Seán a ċuir an leaḃar ċugam, it was John who sent me the book, where a should be do.

A, rel. prn., eclipsing, ar with pret., (1) who, what, all, those, whosoever, all who (whom), all which, all that; as subj. or obj.; baineann a bruil agam leat, what I have is yours; beirim a bruil agam duit, I give you all I have; a ḋtáinig ir a ḋtiocfaiḋ, those who have come or will come; (2) after or in conjunction with prep., an fear le n-a (or lé) mbím, the man with whom I usually am; an fear a mbím (or go mbím) leir, id.; ċan a bfaca riaṁ, compared with everything I have ever seen; dar a bruil beo, by the living: bean a bfaiġeaḋ cuid dá clainn báṫ, a woman who might have lost some of her children; smt. with n- prefixed; an fear n-a mbíoḋ ór aige, he who used have gold; oft. omitted, as: bean mbeaḋ míle bó aici, a woman having a thousand cows; a ṁáiṁe bruil mo ċroiḋe ionnat, O M., you who have my heart; with preps.: le n-a or lé, fá n-a or fá, ó n-a or ó, i n-a or i, tré n-a or tré, do n-a and dá, de n-a and dá, ar a, ar a, tar a, dar a; (3) when, where; an lá úd a dtugair, that day when you gave; an áit a bruil sé, where he is (cf. 1, in). See go and ar.

A. See 1 prep.

A, prep., out of; no change in consonants, prefixes h to vowels, ar before article, rel. prn. and poss. adj.; ar is now in more common use than a as simple prep. See ar, prep.

A, weakened colloquial form of art. and interrog. part. an before vowels; of prep. ag before consonants of verbal noun used participially; weakened form of the prep. and verbal prefix do (or de), as a dí orm=do (de) dí orm, wanting to me; dul a baile=dul do'n (or do) baile, going home; a cloig=do (de) cloig or doin (dein) cloig, of the clock, o'clock; fíol a cuir=fíol do cur, to sow seed; somet. 'e, 'o; in phr. like a bith, a bith duine, whatever person, prob. abbrev. for cia ar bith duine, whoever (Don.).

Á! interj., ah! oh! an exclamation of surprise or disgust. Á! mo thruaigh thú, oh! I pity you; á! maire ní tairneann fé liom, oh! indeed I do not like it; á! fan, ah, cease doing that.

Δon, indef prn., one, a single one, only, the only (oft. with ᾱṁáin) ; the one, the same, any ; with neg. no, none, not any ; Δon iṙ ᾱiᴄe, Δon ᾱṙ ᾱiᴄiḋ, twenty-one ; Δon ḋuine, Δon neᾱċ, any one, anybody ; with neg., no one, nobody ; Δon . . . eile, another ; Δon lᾱ ᾱṁáin, one day, once upon a time ; Δon níḋ, anything, with neg., nothing ; Δon uᾱiṙ, Δon uᾱiṙ ᾱṁáin, once, once upon a time ; ᾱṙ Δon, together, both, all ; mᾱṙ Δon le, along with, together with ; ɡᾱċ Δon, ɡᾱċ n-Δon, every one. Δon is sometimes stressed, and forms one word with the following nouns, as : ḃíomᾱṙ ᾱṁᾱon ᾱṙ Δon-ṙᴄoil, we both attended the same school ; d'Δon-ɡuċ, unanimously ;

but it is not stressed in phrases like ní haon mairfear duit beit ag caint, there is no use in your talk; ní'l agam act aon scilling amháin, I have but a single shilling, and should then be regarded as a separate word. The accentuation of aon takes place when emphasis is to be laid on the singleness, unity, or identity of the idea conveyed by the following word: thus, ní'l aon bhriġ leis an bhocal sin, that word has no meaning, but aoin-bhriġ is eadh an tá focal, both words have one and the same meaning. In the first of these two sentences aon is not emphasised, and should not form one word with bhriġ. If the word amháin follow in the sentence it sometimes takes the emphasis off aon. Aon was in the 16th century, and is in modern times, often written éan, and in compounds aoin becomes éin. An objection to these forms is this, that frequently in poetry aon has to be pronounced aoin (with broad n), which is a recognised sound of ao in Con. and U., but the spelling éan does not lend itself to that sound; in sense of any, with or without neg. it may be used with plural nouns; ní'l fiadh an aon ġairfinidh agam-sa, I have not authority over any boys; indef. prn. anyone, one; gan a. im' choimh, no one being with me.
